8. Main Content

Rules intended to ensure the protection of the workers in extractive industries with regard to the risk of pneumoconiosis resulting from the inhalation of dust, in particular siliceous dust that penetrates into the alveoli of the lungs.

It is necessary to ensure constant medical monitoring of the respiratory system of each worker and to ensure that it is consistent with the dustiness of the air in the places where the work is carried out.

9. Brief Statement of Grounds

The diseases of the pneumoconiosis group, in particular silicosis, are ailments that are highly specific to persons who work in the extractive industries. They call for major preventive action.
