8. Main Content

The mutual recognition clause appears in the second final provision of the regulation on private security approved by Royal Decree 2364 of 9 December 1994.

Private security - Companies - Contracts - Staff - Training - Security measures - Penalties.

Communication of the service provision contracts to the competent authorities; determination of the need for and content of registers of the activities of security companies; more specific determination of the field of private security; training and qualification of private security staff (higher age limit for entry, acceptance of distance training and modification of entrance tests where the applicant has been unemployed for more than two years); improvement of the authorisation procedure for opening and moving establishments or offices requiring security measures; modification of the penalty regime; other aspects of a more technical nature (opening branches, installing and maintaining security measures, alarm systems, security measures in vaults, in safe-deposit boxes, strongboxes and cash dispensers).

9. Brief Statement of Grounds

The experience gained in the practical application of current legislation on private security and its aptness for the economic and social reality to which it applies, have led to the general flexibilisation of administrative intervention in the organisation and work of security companies; greater clarity and precision in drawing up regulatory orders; and, most of all, improved and closer links between public bodies and security companies.
