8. Main Content

The Draft Royal Decree establishes:

- a) the basic national-level health and zootechnical standards for the collection, storage, distribution and marketing of genetic material from the bovine, ovine, caprine, porcine and equine species.
- b) the creation of a national and intra-Community trade register of centres and facilities used for the collection, storage or distribution of genetic material.
- c) the development of an identification system for genetic material for national and intra-Community trade.

9. Brief Statement of Grounds

As a result of the growing trade in genetic material, it became necessary to issue Community-level health and zootechnical regulatory provisions for the purposes, essential to the development of a competitive, sustainable livestock sector, of protecting animal health and organizing commercial exchanges. Nevertheless, in the absence of specific national-level regulation, there is a need to lay down rules governing the conditions for placing genetic material on the market.

The present regulation is aimed at ensuring rational, safe use of such products, through increased transparency of commercial transactions. As animal genetics is the first link in the production chain for a large part of our livestock sector, the extension and consolidation of artificial insemination, semen cryostorage and embryo transfer processes have formed the basis, especially in recent years, of its economic development.
