8. Main Content

Rules to ensure the protection of workers in the extractive industries against the hazards involved in the use of electricity. These involve the laying down of installation and intervention rules which provide sufficient safety as regards the risks of electrocution, fire burn and explosion.

9. Brief Statement of Grounds

The use of electricity in mines and quarries has always required particularly strict precautions because of the above risks. For a long time, these have been the subject of a regulation. The new provisions update the regulation on the basis of the current state of the technology.
