8. Main Content

The sole transitory provision of Order INT/314/2011 of 1 February 2011 on security companies is amended to extend the period in which alarm systems already installed by security companies must be adjusted to the new regulatory requirements from two to ten years.

The sole transitory provision of Order INT/317/2011 of 1 February 2011 on private security measures is amended to extend the period in which establishments required to have security storage units must obtain an image capturing and recording system from two to ten years.

Ministerial Orders INT/314/2011 of 1 February 2011 on security companies, INT/316/2011 of 1 February 2011 on the functioning of alarm systems and INT/317/2011 of 1 February 2011 on private security measures contain various additional provisions which stipulate the immediate application of the amendment or approval of any related UNE or UNE-EN standard to new security installations from the moment they are published by the competent body.

This draft specifies a minimum period of adjustment to these standards and lays down clear rules on enforceability by inspection bodies.

9. Brief Statement of Grounds

At present, the adjustment period indicated in the transitory provisions mentioned in the previous point expires on 18 August 2013.

Given the adverse situation caused the current economic climate, there have been significant socioeconomic changes, both in the situation of security companies which are experiencing economic difficulties and in the sector of regulated establishments, particularly the financial industry which is the primary area required to comply with such security measures.

Meanwhile, the manufacturing, certification and approval of new products in order to ensure they are valid and suitable for sale is a long and costly process. In order to maintain the security of manufacturers, laboratories, inspection bodies, security companies and users, it is therefore essential to set a minimum period for adjustment to these requirements and to lay down clear rules on enforceability by control bodies.
