8. Main Content

The diversity of existing structures and ancillary components, as well as those that could be used in the future, make it necessary to establish a set of additional rules to facilitate and harmonise, to the degree possible, the development, use, assembly, operation and disassembly of those ancillary components, and enhance the necessary safety in building these types of structure.

9. Brief Statement of Grounds

In the construction of road bridges, the use of structures and ancillary components to facilitate and complete the construction process is usual, and may be developed, both from a technical and economic point of view, in the most effective way. In addition, construction techniques are continuously evolving and being updated, incorporating new technological advances to improve construction processes, the application of which may require the design and construction of specific ancillary components. This draft aims to continuously improve construction safety. It also updates Regulation 2007/338/S, submitted in a prior notification.
