8. Main Content

The 2D-Doc two-dimensional bar code standard provides data security in a bar code electronically signed with a private key corresponding to a public key placed in a 'cache server'-type certificate.

For a document, certain data is selected, concatenated, and then digitally signed.

This data and the signature are sent in the form of a specific 2D-Doc bar code.

This standard constitutes a visible signature that is uniquely verifiable by a machine. The main difference from the customary electronic signature rules is the absence of the certificate in the signed document, due to the bar code dimensions.
