8. Main Content

The standard establishes a classification for existing types of healthcare road transport vehicles (types of ambulances), establishing the technical characteristics and staffing requirements for the operations of this specific type of transport.

9. Brief Statement of Grounds

Update of Royal Decree 619/98, of 17 April, establishing the technical characteristics, healthcare equipment and staffing requirements for healthcare road transport vehicles, in accordance to the following:

The conditions for providing healthcare road transport services are governed by Royal Decree 619/98, of 17 April, establishing the technical characteristics, healthcare equipment and staffing requirements for healthcare road transport vehicles (approved on the joint proposal of the Ministry of Public Works, Health and Consumer Affairs).

Over those twenty years, progress has been made in the areas of technology and staff training, among others, enabling improvements to be introduced in the healthcare transport sector with regard to the vehicles used, staffing and the conditions for providing the service.

Pursuant to which, the Spanish Association of Standardization and Certification (AENOR) has approved standard UNE-EN 1789:2007+ A1: 2010, on healthcare transport vehicles and their equipment, published in the Official State Gazette by a Resolution of 7 September 2010, of the General Directorate for Industrial Development, thereby adding the latest technical and medical advances to the vehicles.

In terms of training, Royal Decree 1397/2007, of 29 October establishes the Healthcare Emergency Technician certificate and Royal Decree 710/2010, of 20 May, also approves the Healthcare transport professionalism certificate thus contributing to the improvement in the professionalisation of this sector.

However, these changes prompt the updating of the above-mentioned standard (Royal Decree 619/98/of 17 April).
