8. Main Content

The Gambling Commission recently consulted on an amendment to licence condition 9 of its Licence Conditions and Codes of Practice, October 2008. This submission includes the revised licence condition which we hope to implement and which removes the requirement for the casino industry to seek approval from the Gambling Commission when they want to trial a new game. The amended condition reserves the right for the Commission to adopt a list of prohibited games should the need arise for such a thing.

9. Brief Statement of Grounds

The Gambling Commission decided to consult on this measure since no other gambling sector is required to seek approval for game content prior to introducing a new game. It seemed disproportionate to expect the casino sector to continue to seek approval. Moreover, the Commission, in line with recent government policy, has been trying to limit regulatory burden wherever it can.
