8. Main Content

This present legislation essentially defines resultant obligations for all networks concerning:

- the capacity to distribute television signals according to the standards in force, according to the Directive of 11 May 1992,
- the minimum number of channels that can be carried to the end-user,
- the electrical characteristics of signals captured individually by end-users,
- as well as for the urban cable networks (CATV) the essential requirements in terms of connection capacity of individual users and for collective buildings, located within the range of the network.

9. Brief Statement of Grounds

This present legislation has the following objectives:

- to guarantee users a minimum technical quality standard for sound and television broadcast services, distributed by cable (electrical characteristics of signals at individual outlets of the network),

- to guarantee users compatibility between the networks and public audiovisual terminals (TV receiver, video recorder, etc...)

- to guarantee an adequate level of electromagnetic compatibility between the cable distribution networks and other networks, especially Hertzian,

- to ensure compatibility between the different types of cable distribution networks (urban cable network and internal networks in collective buildings)
