8. Main Content
the regulations are chiefly concerned with health, safety and the conservation of fuel and power in buildings, they introduce new parts f (conservation of fuel and power) and l (heat producing appliances and lpg installations) which revise and consolidate existing parts of the 1990 regulations.

these new parts are supported by technical booklets which contain tables presently in the 1990 regulations and provide for certain methods and standards of building.

other changes include (a) the revision of part j (solid waste in buildings) and (b) additional requirements for (i) ventilation in abitable rooms, kitchens and bathrooms (ii) safety devices in unvented hot water storage systems: and
(iii) access for disabled people.

the regulations are governed in relation to materials and workmanship by regulations a2(5) and b3 of the 1990 regulations which recognise the equivalence of standards from other member states. a corresponding section to regulations a2(5) and b3 is included in the introduction to the technical booklets.
